BURT REYNOLDS "W.W. AND THE DIXIE DANCEKINGS"

Burt Reynolds, star of W.W. and The Dixie Dancekings: "A catchy beat and clear emotional appeal." TIME

Burt Lancaster and Robert Ryan co-star in Executive Action a documentary—like look at JFK's death.

MONDAY PREMIERE DOUBLE FEATURE

Starting November 10, Home Box Office will be bringing you a new concept in entertainment—the premiere double feature. Every Monday evening you will see two new movies never before presented on television. The films will, of course, be repeated during the week, but every Monday you will be able to count on seeing two new movies on HBO.

Young People's Festival features such films as Salty, Last Snow of Spring and David Copperfield that both those young in years and those young in spirit will enjoy.

The Pallisers, the lavish new series starring Susan Hampshire and Philip Latham, has its American premiere this month, with 26 episodes set to be aired.

Burt Reynolds is the king of con in W.W. and The Dixie Dancekings

Burt Reynolds plays the lovable con artist in W.W. and The Dixie Dancekings.

The year is 1957 and Burt Reynolds plays the classic American con artist in 20th Century-Fox's W.W. and The Dixie Dancekings. He drives a '55 Olds hardtop, loves bubble gum and fried chicken, believes oil companies are making too much money and robs filling stations, although he then splits the loot with his victims in exchange for a phony police description. All is going well with W.W.'s Robin Hood approach until one day the police arrive before cue.

Sauve W.W. escapes detection by posing as the manager of a good, but obscure and struggling country-music band called The Dixie Dancekings. Wooing the group with visions of stardom and the Grand Ole Opry, W.W. intends to use the band as a front for his future larceny plans while taking them for a ride.

Or, at least, that's his intention. Slowly, but surely, the great con man himself gets conned by goodness and the band's lead singer, Conny Van Dyke. The tables are reversed and victims become protectors as W.W. falls for their scheme of an honest life.

Art Carney guest stars as Deacon Gore, a lawman turned bible-thumping preacher who is hired by Elton Bird, the nutty fundamentalist owner of the oil company whose chain of gas stations W.W. has been robbing. Oscar-winner Carney has the unenviable task of stopping this havoc-raising demon that Satan has obviously unleashed just to plague his friend and employer.

Director John Avildsen presents this folktale in a natural manner, simply permitting his characters and their predicament to unfold before you. As Vincent Canby of The New York Times noted, the film is "an unexpectedly pleasant surprise." GP Life could often be dangerous in Victorian England with highway robbers on the prowl for victims.

Victorian morality took a stern public view of sex, but had a different idea in private.

Planty and Glencora discover the marriage they first fought is the bedrock of their lives.

The glittering parties provided an ample opportunity for English young ladies to make an impression.

Pallisers arrive in United States; lavish series is set to premiere

Beginning this month, The Pallisers, the lavish twenty-six-hour serial starring Susan Hampshire and Philip Latham, will be shown for the first time in the U.S. exclusively on HBO. The series is a gripping exposition of the life and times, manners and morals, loves and hates, successes and failures of a cast of flamboyant characters who ruled politics and society in England during Queen Victoria's reign.

The series opens with an arranged marriage which pleases neither bride nor groom. Glencora McCluskie (played by Susan Hampshire, the Emmy-winning Fleur of The Forsythe Saga) is charming, beautiful and of unimpeachable lineage. Plantagenet Palliser (Philip Latham) is rich, a member of Parliament, and of noblest ambitions. Both differ with their parents' carefully engineered plans. But the two are united in wedlock—and in discontent.

So opens the drama of two families that grows into a saga of a political dynasty. HBO subscribers will see a new episode of the Palliser family story every week and discover how this forced union grows into a compelling love story. Around Glencora and "Planty" and, as the series progresses, their three children, swirl the fascinating subplots.

There are political complications and reversals, a duel of honor, the disappearance of a fabled diamond collection and murder. But there are also flirtations, romances, and gala entertainments—fetes of elegance and class.

The Daily Telegraph called The Pallisers "one of the great programmes running that bind you to the set week by week." "If we ask whether The Pallisers is good television the answer must be a loud and definite affirmative," said the Financial Times. HBO is proud to introduce The Pallisers, made by the BBC and distributed by Time-Life Films, to America.

The enchantment of the series comes in part from the masterful cast and rich costumes and sets. But The Pallisers is, in the end, a human drama, memorable for its humor and compassion. It was those qualities, which made the Pallisers one of the most popular and praised TV shows in England last year, that inspired HBO to arrange our exclusive showing of the series for you.

Fiction factually inspired is the basis of The Wilby Conspiracy. Set against the explosive background of South Africa's tense racial situation the film stars Sidney Poitier as a black revolutionary leader and Michael Caine as an Englishman who aids him. Nicol Williamson is the ruthless major in support of apartheid who is featured as their protagonist.

I.F. Stone's Weekly, Paperback Hero among the many features on HBO

I.F. Stone's Weekly profiles the life and work of this great journalist.

Keir Dullea is a hockey player who would rather be a frontier marshal.

Among the movies premiering this month on HBO are the story of a journalist who never stopped fighting in his search for the truth and a tale of the insanity of war.

I.F. Stone's Weekly is the engrossing profile of a reporter who had been scorned by his colleagues for years but grew to become an established maverick. A practicing journalist since his teens, Stone worked alone during the 1950s and 1960s putting out his weekly newsletter with just the help of his wife. When he finally shut it down at the end of 1971 his subscribers numbered many of the leading figures in Washington. Stone's philosophy was to pay attention to the facts and figures of official documents, not to speeches. By comparing what politicians were saying with their past policies he graphically showed the hypocrisy of our government. This documentary is a penetrating look at a man obsessed with just one thing—the facts.

King of Hearts is Philip DeBraca's classic look at war and man. Set in a small French village in World War II the film shows what happens when the inmates of the local insane asylum, let loose by the retreating villagers, take over the town. Both sad and funny King of Hearts is a moving look at sanity and savagery.

Also on HBO this month will be Paperback Hero, starring Keir Dullea and Elizabeth Ashley. Dullea is a hockey star in a small Canadian town who would rather be a frontier marshal. His "shoot 'em up" attitude shakes up the town, as well as his own life.

Assassination is target for Executive Action's high-powered plot

The passion to question the Warren Commission's findings on President Kennedy's assassination lingers on. Executive Action, a provocative film, released by National General Pictures, is a speculative documentary that dramatizes one of many conspiracy theories about the death of John F. Kennedy.

Burt Lancaster stars as a maverick intelligence mastermind hired by three right-wing millionaires (Robert Ryan, Will Geer and John Anderson) united in their distrust of the Kennedy cult. Lancaster uses his expertise and their wealth to design a diabolic plot: Three Bay of Pigs veterans trained as sharpshooters will assassinate Kennedy while FBI informant Lee Harvey Oswald will be incriminated by evidence planted by an Oswald look-alike.

The film counterpoints newsreel footage of Kennedy before the assassination—playing with his children or speaking at the United Nations—with shots of the conspirators in action. One eerie scene shows the marksmen at a deserted rifle range shooting at dummies in an open limousine. Perhaps most terrifying is seeing Kennedy's face in the cross hairs of a rifle scope.

Released to coincide with the tenth anniversary of that dark day in November, Executive Action inspired heated controversy and five major metropolitan television stations banned advertisements for the picture, fearing they might trigger another assassination. The production of the film was shrouded in secrecy, with the producers fearful it would "never see the light of day." The film skillfully splices documentary footage with convincing invention, leaving the viewer to determine where history ends and fantasy begins. GP

Encores: A second look at some great films

THE FRONT PAGE. Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau co-star in Billy Wilder's version of the classic story about American newspapermen. Carol Burnett is also featured in this third movie made of Ben Hecht's great play.

HARRY AND TONTO. Art Carney garnered his first Oscar for his portrayal of an old man, evicted from his Manhattan apartment, who crosses the country with his cat as companion. Ellen Burstyn is also featured.

ALICE DOESN'T LIVE HERE ANYMORE. Winning both critical and popular plaudits, as well as an Oscar, Ellen Burstyn portrays a widow who goes looking for a new life. What she finds is a new love as well in the person of Kris Kristofferson, while she takes a chance on the singing career that she has always longed for.

AIRPORT '75: Charlton Heston heads an all-star cast in this film inspired by Arthur Hailey's novel. When a small plane crashes into a Boeing 747 Heston must rush to save stewardess Karen Black and a passenger roster packed with stars such as Sid Caesar, Helen Reddy and Myrna Loy.

So HBO viewers can see great films they may have missed or want to see again, we set encore showings of the best films. This month's encore features include:

Crime bosses, detectives and more on HBO

Some of the best recent detective and crime films will be available on HBO this month for those who enjoy that genre. From biographies of crime leaders to complex detective stories the gamut runs deep. And for those who prefer other fare there is plenty of that.

Lucky Luciano and Lepke are the pair of crime bios. Lucky, a solidly-acted, nearly factual rendition of the life of the world's first international gangster, trade bloodletting for characterization. Lucky stars Rod Steiger and Edmund O'Brien, with the narcotics agent responsible for putting Luciano away making a special appearance. Lepke stars Tony Curtis in another graphic look at the life of the underworld. Night Moves with Gene Hackman will kick off December's schedule. This complicated mystery finds Hackman tied up in a Mayan smuggling ring.

Among the other films on HBO this month however are: Ten Little Indians, in which an all-star cast headed by Oliver Reed and Elke Sommer find themselves caught in an Agatha Christie mystery; Triple Echo, starring Reed and Glenda Jackson in the story of a World War II deserter; 'Tis Pity She's A Whore, a hard look at the fatal love between a brother and sister; and Return of the Streetfighter, the latest of the Kung Fu Specials.

Islander upstarts to challenge Montreal tradition

"The police should send out a missing persons bulletin for 20 Montreal hockey players," grumbled a Canadian fan after his favorites were ousted early in last season's NHL playoffs.

"Why do people keep downgrading the Islanders?" asked Flyer Coach Fred Shero, whose team barely beat them out to advance to the Stanley Cup finals. "They are a heck of a team."

Montreal's players are no longer missing, New York still has a "heck of a team," and when the tradition-rich Canadiens meet the upstart Islanders Nov. 27 at the Nassau Coliseum the game should be full of action.

A high-powered offense has long been a Montreal trademark and this year's triggermen will be led by Center Pete Mahovlich and Wingers Guy Lafleur and Yvan (Roadrunner) Cournoyer. Mahovlich used to be faulted for not passing enough, a shortcoming that prompted a teammate to refer to his line as the Donut Line "because it has no center." But in 1974-75, Mahovlich passed as never before, breaking Jean Beliveau's team record for assists.

Canadien goalie Ken Dryden will protect the net against the Islanders.

When Montreal faces New York it will be up against a formidable defensive team; not the case during the Islanders' 1972-73 inaugural season. Last spring they pushed the eventual Cup winners, the Flyers, to the brink before losing to them in the last game of the semifinals.

Two kingpins in the Islander defense are Glenn Resch and Denis Potvin. Resch was superlative in goal during the playoffs and Potvin became the fifth defenseman in NHL history to score 20 goals in a season. You will see them all in this game, one of many hockey contests that will be brought to you this season by HBO. HW

Young people's films set for young of heart of all ages

Father and son in Last Snow.

The friends of David Copperfield.

Salty and master frolic together.

To meet the demand for quality programs for young people HBO presents three films in a festival for both those young in years and young in spirit.

David Copperfield, which is being brought to you in a series of four 1½-hour programs is one of the most popular books Charles Dickens ever wrote. The film is filled with unforgettables, including Mr. Micawber (based on Dickens' father), and that infamous villain—Uriah Heep. David Copperfield, made by the BBC and distributed by Time-Life Films, dramatizes the wonders and trials of growing up in Victorian England.

The Last Snow of Spring is touching without being sentimental. Luca, a nine-year-old boy, learns that his father is having an affair with a young woman. Since his mother's death, Luca had looked to his father for support. Now his feelings alternate between hostility—at his father's new lover—and an intense need to love. When Luca is found to be terminally ill, he and his father confront the nature of their love.

Salty is a seal with an overdose of energy and humor, both of which land him in trouble more than his devoted master can cope with. When Salty is accused of causing a house fire, there is no saving him. He is sentenced to a life term at a zoo. Salty is outraged and his comeback is not to be denied. Here is both charm and spectacular underwater photography.
